Alexis Galinos is a Development economist, currently CEO of the Athens Development and Destination Management Agency. He has worked as external consultant for the World Bank, served as Special Secretary and Advisor to the Hellenic Ministry of Foreign Affairs and has worked for the Municipality of Athens in economic development matters since 2003.

He holds a Master's Degree in Public Administration from Harvard University, an MSc in European Social Policy from the London School of Economics and Political Science and a BA in Economics from Bates College.